

HONORING THOSE WHO SERVED

Flagship prepares to launch initiatives focused on Veteran Re-entry

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE 1/18/18

Our servicemen and women are among the most respected members of society, bravely placing their lives on the line each day to protect the very freedoms our great nation was founded upon. But while they warrant our respect, they face some of the same challenges of the common man; including finding gainful employment.

Their struggles have been well-documented in years past as many have struggled to assimilate themselves back into civilian life and find job opportunities that align with their skill sets.

"The skills that they acquire through their service are invaluable; there's no other way to state it. They're disciplined, focused, driven and would be a complement to any organization they choose to be a part of and Flagship has begun to make our case to be one," says Don Toole, National Vice President of Sales & Marketing for Flagship.

Flagship recognizes the challenges and the respect our soldiers are due and has begun an initiative that focuses helping them transition back into the civilian workforce. In the near future, the company plans to begin aggressively targeting military installations throughout the nation with Texas being the state the program is introduced in.

"This represents an amazing opportunity for all of the parties involved and we recognize that. As such, we are prepared to launch a full-scale recruiting initiative and work toward becoming their employer of choice while also building a long-term relationship with all branches of our military."
